Stephen Torrey: A Discourse at the Presbyterian Church Honesdale, Pa Mr. Stephen Torrey s long and influential connection with the Presbyterian church at Honesdale, led, after his death, to the appropriating of the Sunday morning service of December 15th, 1889, as a service memorial of him. On that morning was delivered the memorial sermon which constitutes the substance of this little book. When good men die they are not altogether lost to us. Their memory and their influence remain, and they thus bequeath themselves to the church and are a part of its heritage. The Scripture says to Christians: All things are yours; whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas, all are yours. That is to say, all good men belong to us, even when they are gone from our sight. We have a certain property in them. We, at this day, are the richer for the holy zeal and Christian heroism of the apostle Paul, and, to this extent, he is ours and cannot be taken from us. And so, when a good man dies from among us, after a while - after the first bewildering sense of loss is over - we have a memorial service. What is the object and meaning of it?
