Rushridge, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .We sat at his kitchen table overlooking the Main Street of Absaraka, the bird clock on the wall tweeted the passing of time. An occasional Burlington Northern train lumbered its noisy way through the tiny town - a swirl of snow rising from beneath its heavy steel wheels. The winter passed quickly as I learned about the life of Roy Faught. Snowy days became hot summer forays into the Dirty Thirties as Roy struggled to harvest a wheat crop stunted by the extreme drought. Scrawny heads bravely standing on stalks mere inches tall. The loud clack of pool balls and scent of beer mingled with tobacco as he described his pool hall days - clamoring with excitement after the fresh repeal of prohibition. Roy s eyes sparkled with laughter as he remembered the sweet rhythmic beat of a local band luring friends and neighbors into a two-step as they danced the night away upon a creaky hay loft floor at the original Faught farm in 1924. Sharp of mind and able bodied, Roy Faught is quite the character. In fact, Roy comes from a lineage of characters. His grandfather, Phillip H. Faught served in the Civil War and evidently enjoyed life along with a few shenanigans. According to a Civil War diary post dated July 29, 1862 it was reported that P.H. Faught is in the guardhouse for running his horse. I ll bet that was something to write home about! Roy has many memories, both good and bad but the most memorable for him is the people that have touched his life. This wise man states, I have been lucky! I ve been lucky to have known...
