Not illustrated. 1910 Excerpt: .vary in width from sixteen feet down to six feet, according to the amount of water required. MaIntenance.--Each white man who has leased land from the Indians, or who has purchased the allotment of an Indian who has died, is required to pay 60 cents per acre per year for ditch maintenance. The system has been operative for so short a time that very little has yet been done in the way of maintenance. The chief item the past year was clearing the banks of the Russian thistles and burning them. If not removed, these weeds break off, blow into the ditch and lodge, clogging the channel and forcing the water to cut around. In some places the curves in the ditch should be flattened or the banks protected by rip-rap. In other places, especially in ditches and laterals that carry little water, weeds have clogged the channel to some extent and must be removed. Costs.--On account of several unusual features the cost per acre is extremely low, and therefore an analysis of the cost will probably be of interest. So far no reservoir is required on any of the projects, the summer flow of the streams being more than ample for all the land to be irrigated for several years to come. This eliminates one item which is often a considerable part of the total cost. Later.on, the Ray ditch will have a feeding reservoir about half way down its length which is to be...
