Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: .Kilauea and Mauna Loa, however, show that two adjoining volcanoes can be in activity simultaneously. The lunar formations described had the following characteristics: See Holdbn, Publications A. S. P., Vol. III, page 250. tSee Becker, geometrical form of volcanic cones, and the elastic limit of lava, j4mir.Jour. Set., October, 1885. First.--Their circumferences were circular, elliptic, or irregularly elliptic. Second.--They had plainly visible walls, more or less flat on the outside, and steep inside. Third.--They had well-defined, level, or slightly curved bottoms. Only to these the name of crater should be applied. They can be compared with terrestrial volcanoes of the Hawaiian type, and differ from the latter: First.--In regard to their greater dimensions. Second.--That their bottoms are considerably below the average level of immediate surroundings. Third.--By the rarity of internal ruptures. The surface of the Moon shows, however, many other forms which differ materially from those so far described; they are located partly inside and partly outside of craters. Ptolomaeus (L. W. and P. W.), for example, shows upon a wide and nearly level lava-plain the so-called crater A., a circular opening, without visible bottom, upon a conical peak. Close to the north is a cup-shaped depression. In a terrestrial lava-field it would be said that such a depression was formed by the escape of a big bubble. Sometimes two openings upon so-called central mountains are close together, as, for example, southeast of Archimedes, near the rim of Mare Imbrium; and sometimes they appear in the...
